Team A has three minutes to guess the sentence. If they figure it out, the time clerk records how long If they do not understand it within three minutes, the timekeeper announces that the weather has expired and records a time of three minutes. A player from team B extracts a phrase from the basket of team A, and the game proceeds as above. Normally the game continues until each player had the possibility of "acting out" a sentence. The score for each team is the total time necessary for the team for all rounds. The team with the low score wins the game. Gestures to interpret a phrase, usually starts indicating in which category the phrase is and how many words are in the sentence. From that moment on, the usual procedure consists in reciting the words one at a time (even if not necessarily in the order in which they appear in the sentence). In some cases, however, it can be more sensible to try to recite "the entire concept" of the sentence at once. To indicate the categories: Title of the book: Roll out your hands as if it were a book. Title of the film: pretending to maneuver an old style camera. Game title: pretend to pull the rope that opens the curtain of a theater. Title of the song: pretending to sing. Television programs: draw a rectangle to outline the television screen. Quote or phrase: do quotes in the air with your fingers. Indicate other things: number of words in the title: Keep the fingers at the top. On which word you are working: keep the number of fingers again. Number of syllables in the word: place the number of fingers on the arm. On which syllable you are working: put the number of fingers on the arm again. Length of the Word: make a "small" or "big" sign as if you are stirring measuring a fish. Ā «The whole concept: sweeps your arms in the air. "On the nose" (that is, someone has made a correct assumption): he points his nose with one hand, while he points the person with the other hand. Ā € "sound like": cut a hand behind a ear. Eating quickly creates a visual image very different from the image you get of someone who eats in a thoughtful or noisy or avidly each of those adverbs modifies the verb that eats in a different way. Part of the fun of this game is that the combinations of Adverb Verbo-Adverb draw from the piles of cards not always together. For example, a student may have to act that eating suspiciously or screaming calmly. Playing in teams can also play in two or more teams. If you play in teams, you will want to alternate the students, calling a student of each team before calling a second student of any team. You could give each student team the first possibility of guessing the verb and adverb that is acting. If a teammate does not guess the word by the end of a pre -established time limit, anyone in another team can call the word and win those points.
